Aggressive firefighting over the past several days has dramatically reduced fire growth and precipitation Wednesday afternoon significantly improved fire conditions. Less heat detected overnight compared to previous nights, minimal growth reported. Today crews will focus on improving control lines. With a red flag warning in effect starting at 11am, a structure protection group has been established. Additional personnel continue to arrive on scene and will be positioned and ready for a rapid change in fire conditions as winds strengthen.

Northerly winds will bring a strong push of dry offshore flow to the area today through Saturday morning. Winds will become more north to northeast throughout the night into Friday morning and will continue to strengthen along ridges and channeled terrain areas with humidity levels continuing to drop rapidly. Wind gusts are expected to reach 20-30mph later this morning into the afternoon and gusts of 40-45 along ridges and peaks.

Mandatory evacuations remain in place for zone LKH-1448-B. Residents who have not evacuated are encouraged to do so. Evacuation information and alerts can be found by visiting protect.genasys.com
