Current Situation: Great Basin Complex Incident Management Team 3 assumed command of the Logan fire this morning at 7:30am. Yesterday, the team installed an Incident Remote Automatic Weather Station (IRAWS) at the Big Creek Airstrip. This portable, solar-powered weather station provides information on the hour including windspeed and direction, air temperature, precipitation, relative humidity, among other things, which helps the incident meteorologist dial in forecasts. Weather influences fire behavior, which fire managers use to make strategic decisions on where firefighters will work to protect values. While fire behavior was moderate yesterday, there was some activity along the Hogsback Ridge. Today, three crews will work installing handline between the community of Edwardsburg and Hogsback Ridge. A structure protection group will continue holding the line around the community and the night operations will continue extinguishing any spot fires and securing the fire perimeter between the fire front and the town, providing 24-hour protection. Falling modules are working to open the Smith Creek Road and Elk Summit Road just north of Government Creek which is impassable due to fallen trees.
